NOTES ABOUT THIS PROJECT

FROM DR. NICOLE A. COOKE

This project emerged out of the pain and frustration associated with the back-to-back deaths of #GeorgeFloyd #BreonnaTaylor and #AhmaudArbery in 2020. We must do better as a global society! #BlackLivesMatter

This list is not a panacea. This compilation of resources is JUST A STARTING POINT to encourage people to do their own work and have their own hard conversations.

Becoming Anti-Racist

Created by Dr. Andrew Ibrahim

Becoming Anti-Racist is a journey. Below is a visual that helps captures a lot of what I've learned so far. I share it with hope that it helps your journey too and helps keep you accountable with hard questions you should ask yourself. Whatever we are today, we can all be better. I'm ashamed I did not commit to this sooner. #BlackLivesMatter

How To Be An Antiracist

Ibram X. Kendi's concept of antiracism reenergizes and reshapes the conversation about racial justice in America--but even more fundamentally, points us toward liberating new ways of thinking about ourselves and each other. Instead of working with the policies and system we have in place, Kendi asks us to think about what an antiracist society might look like, and how we can play an active role in building it.

White Anti-Racist Ally Resource List

Readings, Podcasts, Films, Youth-led Media, Journalist/Public Academic Sites, Children's Books, Parenting Resources, and Suggestions for Action/Donations

Compiled by Dr. Lauren Silver, May-June 2020

This compilation is built through the labor of many and it links curated pages from friends, colleagues, and others who strive to educate themselves and others through racial justice. This list is intended for White people and White parents who want to do a better job as anti-racist allies and who seek support in their learning and efforts.

I was inspired to create this list because of my friend, Crystal Hawkins, a Black reproductive justice activist. She is exhausted! White people (and I include myself): we need to step up to educate ourselves and to engage in the emotional work of healing without retraumatizing or burdening our Black family, friends, and colleagues.

Let me be clear: I am not suggesting that racial justice work is done in isolation—coalitions across identity groups are essential and many Black-led movements for racial justice work with White allies. I hope this list meets you wherever you are at and that you find sources and guidance to confront White supremacy and eradicate racism in your relationships, communities.

Some Guidance for Talking with Kids about the Protests that are Sweeping this Country

Students will come to virtual school having seen protests against racism on the news. You need to talk about what they've seen and about what they are thinking and feeling. You may worry that you are ill-equipped to handle such a conversation, that it is touchy, that your kids are young, that you could say the wrong things. But what you need to know is that if you are silent, if you circle around the topic, then your silence speaks loudly and clearly. If you are silent, that silence says that you do not see the pain that Black people in particular are experiencing. You--and by extension, your class--become onlookers, standing silently by, eyes averted. In doing so, you participate in injustice.

How do you talk with kids about what's happening in the nation right now? You might have reservations about opening things up. If you say, "Class, you are most likely aware of the protests against racism that have been occurring around the country, What are you thinking and feeling?" you may rightly worry that some children will talk about the protests as violent looting and that discussion would heap yet more pain onto the shoulders of the children in your class who will already be feeling the most pain. So instead of starting with that general opener, you may want to spend some time framing your class' ways of thinking about the protests that are occurring.

One way to do this is to talk about the history of protest in this nation, pointing out that America was born in protest. The American Revolution--an entire war--was fought because early colonizers resisted taxes that they

100 Picture Books Including Black People and Communities & Why You Need Them

Update 6/5/2020: After seeing tweets from several Black educators/ authors/ scholars about the need to promote Black voices first and foremost in any work right now, it made me reconsider this list. Upon reflecting on my initial process for adding titles I recognize that it was a mistake to put together a list like this at this time for this purpose without consideration of who created the book.

Why we need to call out casual racism

We can't have an honest reckoning about race until we start to recognize all the ways in which privilege and prejudice creep into our lives.

Why we need to call out casual racism

There comes a time in every upwardly mobile Black person's life when they encounter someone who tells them how "well-spoken" and "articulate" they are. It is usually a white person who is earnest and honest in their admiration of your verbal abilities, and in that moment, you swing between being appreciative and being totally offended.

27 THINGS WHITE PEOPLE SHOULD NEVER, EVER SAY TO THEIR BLACK CO-WORKERS

While most agree these issues aren't appropriate to discuss at work, they inevitably do come up. However, in order to keep the peace with their co-workers of color, it's probably a good idea if our white colleagues tread lightly on matters that are really emotional and of consequence to the black community.

This raconteur uses her powerful first-person account of "White Privilege" and "Black Lives Matter" to underscore the responsibility each one of us has to bring about change.

10 Things ALLIES Can Do

An 'ally' is someone who has privilege, but chooses to stand for and with marginalized communities* by taking tangible, ongoing actions to dismantle systems of oppression.

*Marginalized communities* are those who are targeted by oppression, including but not limited to: people of color, Muslims, immigrants, refugees, LGBTQ people, women and people with disabilities.

1 LISTEN

Listen to what marginalized people are saying – face-to-face, on your social media feed or in the articles you read. It's not about you, your feelings or opinions; it's about hearing theirs.

Seek out books, articles, films, etc. about the history and current issues facing marginalized communities, and attend formal anti-oppression trainings.

3 GET INVOLVED

Join local groups working for social justice. Subscribe to their e-mail lists, follow them on social media and show up to support their work.

2 GET EDUCATED

When someone is being targeted – physically or verbally – intervene only with their permission. Focus on supporting them rather than engaging the aggressor.

5 SPEAK UP

When a friend, family member, co-worker or stranger says something hateful or ignorant, call them out on it. Silence allows oppression to continue.

When someone from a marginalized community invites you to an event, go – be there to listen, learn and show your support.
